New Yorkers are stepping up pressure on Gov. Cuomo to back out of an immigrant fingerprint-sharing program-just like the Illinois governor. States who take part in Secure Communities automatically send to Homeland Securities the fingerprints of everyone who is booked.

The Federal Government says the program is to find and deport dangerous criminals, opponents say the program sweeps up low-level offenders and even domestic violence victims.

"The time is now for Gov. Cuomo to take a stance," said Sunita Patel, staff attorney at the Center for Constitutional Rights. "Individuals who have been victims of domestic violence have been deported because of Secure Communities."

A dozen religious leaders held a vigil outside Cuomo's office urging him to follow Illinois Gov.

Pat Quinn's lead and yank New York State out of the program. A Cuomo spokesman said the administration is reviewing the program, which has been rolled out in 24 New York counties but

NIGERIA AND FRANCE NEGOTIATE A NEW IMMIGRATION AGREEMENT.

Nigeria and France have begun a process of improved partnership on immigration to ensure balance in the exchange for Nigerian professionals working in France. Nigeria's envoy to France, Ambassador Gordon Bristolm, told the News Agency of Nigeria (NAN) in Paris that the development was in line with the EU-Africa immigration cooperation pact on unified migration policy.

According to him, "A situation where our professionals are taken away from us by developed countries including the EU without anything given in return is not a fair proposition. When the negotiation starts, we have to ensure that whatever agreement we reach takes into account our own national interests."

British Metropolitan Police Ordered to Pay Damages to Nigerian Immigrants.

The British Metropolitan Police has been ordered to pay damages to four women for failing to investigate allegations that they had been forced into slavery. The women who arrived in London from Nigeria as children, said they were beaten and emotionally abused by the families they were forced to work for, the British Broadcasting Corporation reported.

The High Court said the women were "victims of the failure to investigate." The Metropolitan Police argued it could not carry out an investigation because the women would not cooperate, but the court dismissed this as untenable.
